Alien Shooter 2 for Android: kill lots of aliens and various kinds of monsters appearing in the city.The laser-plasma interaction should be promising for the development of high-energy-density fusion power plants. To minimize the risk of damage to the mirrors used in laser-plasma experiments, the National Ignition Facility (NIF) was equipped with a new mirror system (designated M7) made from crystalline silicon. To date, no distinct evidence of damage to the M7 target material has been observed. To further enhance the durability of M7, we are developing M7 with a highly polished surface (designated M7e). To generate a polishing reference, we have fabricated M7e also from crystalline silicon. In this study, we have observed microfabricated marks on M7e material using a scanning-electron-microscopy (SEM) analysis. The developed high-energy electron beam (50-100 keV) is capable of etching the crystalline silicon material when used in an appropriate beam energy and beam current density. To further analyze the etch depth, we are applying an extended SEM to this process. The preliminary SEM images confirm that the etch depth has a granular structure and that the etch depth is closely related to the ion beam current density (at a primary electron energy of 30 keV) and electron beam spot size. The 3D surface topography of M7e is currently being analyzed. The results of this analysis will be made available as part of this revision. For M7e mirrors, we are studying surface damage mechanisms and mitigation strategies. We are also studying surface radiation damage mechanisms caused by irradiation with neutrons from the laser-driven inelastic collisions of deuterons and tritons. The deuterium's (and tritons') fast 04aeff104c
