Now view your design. Is everything in place? If not, starting with the photo/video to edit and re-edit until you are satisfied with each part is the only way you can get it done well. Once you are done with the photo/video editing, you can go to Photoshop and make some small tweaks, such as adjustment layers. Also, go to the added image and go to Adjust > Brightness & Contrast. Lower the levels. Edit, crop, and use the Lasso tool to select the parts of the image that need to be focused. When you select the area that you want to edit, you will see the software icon, appearance of a triangle. Click on the icon and go to Select > Inverse to crop the area of interest. With the adjustment layers, you can change the opacity of the layers. If you apply too much or too little opacity, you would need to use the Eraser tool. Alternatively, you can select each part and use its Adjustments dialog box to change its opacity. Once you are done with the adjustment, you can go to the top of the layers and use the command Show/Hide Layer. If you want to edit the image again, go back to the menu shown earlier, click on Brightness & Contrast, and select Brightness/Contrast. You can use the same steps as you did before. Sometimes, an image has a little too much or not enough of a specific color. For example, it might have too much red color. The red might be too bright or too pale. If you have that in your mind, you can use the paint tool and customize the color. You can paint a new color, change the intensity, or you can even move a color. Create a new adjustment layer for that and you are good to go.
